"for a moment that the Foreign Customs 'service of that country would be entrusted to the care of Sir Robert Harr, who has "filled the post of Inspector-General of Chi-" nose Customs with consummate ability and "tact for the last twenty years. This slap "in the face to so distinguished an official would be inexplicable in a European service, and it is doubtless attributable to one of those Palace intrigues which did not occur to the writer of the foregoing apparently that, Korea being a poor and utterly insignificant country as commight object to part with so influential and so trusted an official as Sir Robert Habt.

A man of less experience could manage the well enough, but it was necessary that the person appointed should take an active part in the work, and it was hardly likely that an official of the rank and standing of Sir ROBERT HART would go to Korea. We fail to see that any slight was put on Sir ROBERT HART or that any was intended. In fact, the reverse was the case. Sir Rohent would probably object to be sent on such a mission, in any case, and he certainly would decline the undertaking if it involved—as seems likely—the permanent residence of the organizer in Korea. From what we can learn, Mr. You MOLLENDORFF has been appointed to the post of Inspector-General of the Korean Customs, not merely to organize the service, and according to recent statements he has commenced the study of the Korean language in order to facilitate the conduct of his duties:

If any one has a right to be aggrieved at his appointment it would be those officials in Chinese Imperial Maritime Customs service who might fairly have expected to be asked to take it instead of a German Consular-official. There may, however, have been some substantial reason for offering the appointment to some one unconnected with the Chinese service; possibly the fact that it would have made Chinese dictation to Korea.

ORIENTAL FLOWER LORE.

An interesting statement is made by Mr. Burbidge ("The Gardens of the Sun," p. 126) respecting a peculiarity of plant life in Malaya. "I found a flowering shrub on the Tawaran river, the stems of which were swollen and hollow just etemmed plant, parasitical on low jungle-trees its existence on the bite of a species of ant. The seed germinates on the bark of a festertree; and when the seedling has attained a stationary, until the necessary bite is given. when the stem swells out at the base, and leaves and flowers are produced in due course. A SUGGESTION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "DAILY PRESS." Sir.—May I, through the medium of your! columns, grave the attention of the proper and thority to a want, which though already referred to, still remains unattended to? I allude to the econstruction of the path and bridge that leads from Robinson road through the New Public Garden. This place was once a favourite evening walk of not a few persons, and if no other attention can now be bestowed upon it, a gaslamp, at least, might be placed by the site, as, in dark nights, unwary passers by run the risk of falling down the precipitous banks. YAKOOB BEG.

Yakoob Beg seemed to be a second Tamerlane in 1876, when Russia and England were both The retiring Council have in conclusion to bidding for his alliance. In 1877 his life was diately took his place in history as a second. rate adventurer of a type common enough in Asiatic countries, but almost peculiar to them. He only paid the inevitable penalty of failure, but until the publication of Colonel Kuropatkin's book on Kashgaria very little was really known of him in Europe. Major Gowan, of H. M. Indian Army, has just translated this book from the Russian, and Anglo-Indian readers will, for the first time, have an opportunity of learning something definite about a name that has figured largely in our frontier history for the last twenty years. Yakoob Beg was born about sixty years ago. His birth was the signal for his mother's divorce. She remarried a butcher and died soon afterwards, and Yakoob became a baicha, "a pretty boy who dances before the public in female apparel." He was very successful in this degrading career, and passed from the bands of one master to another. He was, says Colonel Kuropatkin, " a pretty, well formed, strongly-made boy, with a neck slightly short, with a fresh coloured face and heautiful eyes," and was distinguished for his skill in dancing. Just as he was outgrowing the age when batchas cease to attract by their personal appearance and ingenuity in dancing, one of his masters married his sister. This gave him a off. Different countries different fashions, rapidly his early history was soon forgotten. He as the traveller said who mistook a man for a was sugaged against the Russians on one side He was bound over in his own recognisances woman. The soldiers saw in him a na always worked in the name of the Khan of Kasligar. But when the completeness of his conquests rendered the army completely devoted to him, he sent the Khan on a pilgrimage to Mecca, and took possession of the throne without opposition. He united for the first time the Khanates of Kashgar, Yangi Hissar, Yarkand and Khotan, and while lesser Khanates were being gradually brought in he devoted himself to the establishment of a regular army and the consolidation of his conquests. Trade was encouraged so that he might receive a heavy tribute. The husbandmen were squeezed to the last degree in order that the army might be well paid. He received two English Embassies and one Russian Embassy, and despatched Envoys to India and Con-

But he was hated in proportion to his power. He had poisoned many men of influence, and their friends were naturof flour-cakes smeared with bean-oil or home-oil ally arrayed against him. For thirteen years be had not omitted a single prayer, but he had for the first time taxed the lands of the priests. courses intended to irrigate this fine plain; but He had appointed officers to see that the women went about properly veiled. He had set an example of extreme simplicity of life, and acted as though he "could turn the country into one green was visible, and the few flocks of sheep we vast monastery in which the new monks must cultivate the soil with the swent of their brow, give as much as possible—nay the greater part of their earnings-into the hand of the Government to devote to warlike purposes. On the other hand, he kept 300 women in his harem, six of whom accompanied him in all his wanderings. In a word, he was feared and hated. In Apirl. 1877, the Chinese prepared to invade Kashgar on a grand scale. They captured a thousand Kashgarians in the first engagement, but treated them kindly and set them satisfied with the manner in which the settle- that a young girl about sixteen years of age. at liberty to spread the rumour that the Chinese were only coming to free the people from the extortions of Yakoob Beg. Yakoob Beg heard of this, and actually murdered all these released prisoners to prevent the story spreading. This completed the dissatisfaction of his people. They began to desert in large numbers, and the inforiated Ameer seems to have been driven out of time to afford free access thereto to all Chinese attractive, but her mistress clung to her with his senses. In the afternoon of the 28th May he killed his Private Scoretary with the butt end of a gun for disobeying some trifling order, and then began to best his Treasurer. it is hoped that on the whole the line has been 18. My faithful cook, who is a widower, was In the struggle he received a blow that stunned him, and of which he died next morning. In la few weeks more the whole country was overrun, and all his wide conquests were annexed to China. This is the first time we have seen off with the information "ali's well," fand then our indebtedness by appending a character of the Ameer, supplied by letter by the man who man, possessed of a surprising memory. He was at the same time both couning and sly. The trath he searcely ever spoke. He was an egotist in the fullest sonse and respected the opinion of no man. As a military man he of late showed himself to be very inferior. As a polygamist he surpassed the Persian Fatali Shah. In his private life he was simple, without any pretenions, and was satisfied with little. At times te was kind and courteous to all. He observed the ceremonies of religion in a conscientious manner. During the twenty-four hours he rested only for four hours, being compled during the remainder of the day. He trusted no one. In all matters, whether relating to the stable or the cook-house, or to the most important affairs of State, he looked after everything himself." This in itself is a remarkable doon- . . ment, very shrowdly written, and will do almost as much as the book before us to explain the suddenness of the rise and downfall of Yakoob Beg's Kashgaria .- Times of India.
